

Netherlands: The Dutch allotment gardens and sustainability

Sustainability in the gardens is a hot item in The Netherlands. It is high on the agenda of our association and this is proven by the fact that this summer we have four new participating associations of our project National Quality Mark Natural Gardening.

We will also visit 11 associations for a reassessment, so that the previously obtained quality marks can be extended with another 4 years.

Furthermore this spring two new associations have been awarded the quality marks for the first time.

Two associations, Driehok in Utrecht and Stadspark in Groningen, have asked to receive the diploma on an ecological gardening of the International Office du Coin de Terre et des Jardins Familiaux.
